CDI Electronics Operational After the Southeastern Storms

MADISON, AL - May 1, 2011

CDI Electronics, the world's leading manufacturer of quality ignition components, has again started their full operations after the major outbreak of severe weather throughout the Southeast.

"We have been working steadily since the storm occurred to restore the power to our factory," said Barry Neal, President and CEO of CDI Electronics. " We have acquired a Caterpillar generator capable of powering the facility while the local utility crews are working toward full power restoration to our surrounding areas. This generator will allow us to resume our day to day operations without further disruptions during this challenging time."

"We appreciate the patience and outpouring of concern from our customers and friends during this tragic time" said Thomas James, Sales and Marketing Manager, "We are truly fortunate that all of our employees are safe and will be at the offices Monday. Our condolences are shared with all of those in our state and in the Southeast who suffered losses."

CDI Electronics will resume normal operations beginning at 7:00AM CST on May 2, 2011.
